facts and figures at a glance from Dodge City Community College

Partnerships: Dodge City Community College participates in learning exchanges that benefit students of all ages. Here are some examples:

With Dodge City USD 443

DCCC is a partner with USD 443 in a joint application for Migrant Program and Even Start Program grant funds.

USD 443 shares its track and football playing field facilities with DCCC athletes.

The two entities, along with the Dodge City Area Chamber of Commerce, are making plans for a professional development program for employees January 19, 1998. The program will feature a presentation by Ed Barlow, a noted futurist.

Dodge City High School is one of six area high schools with which DCCC participates in Tech-Prep agreements. High school juniors and seniors enroll in technical courses at DCCC and receive both high school and college credit for their studies.

With area school districts

Students from several neighboring high schools (Jetmore, Spearville, Bucklin, Minneola and South Gray) also have the opportunity to explore technical careers through Tech-Prep agreements with Dodge City Community College. This fall, 30 high school students are taking classes in welding, auto mechanics, business, cosmetology, farm and ranch, electronics, allied health and child care programs.

High schools at Ashland, Bucklin, Coldwater, Dodge City, Fowler, Greensburg, Haviland, Meade, Minneola, Pratt, Protection and Plains/Kismet are linked through the interactive video connections that deliver specialized courses to the schools.

DCCC and area high schools on the A+ Network share the cost of an instructor who teaches Spanish over the video network and in DCCC classrooms.

With the City of Dodge City

DCCC and Dodge City's Parks and Recreation Department are involved in a project to renovate Cavalier Field, a baseball playing field on the campus of the former St. Mary of the Plains College. DCCC will use the facility during the school year, while the city's recreation programs will play ball on the field during the summer.

With area community colleges

The Boards of Trustees of Dodge City, Garden City and Seward County Community Colleges conduct regular joint meetings to discuss issues of common concern.

The three colleges (DCCC, GCCC and SCCC) have jointly developed television advertising campaigns for the past three years to explain the benefits and services of southwest Kansas community colleges.

Physical plant directors from the three colleges meet monthly to exchange information and ideas.

With Fort Hays State University

DCCC and FHSU have shared the cost of developing an Interactive Television (ITV) classroom on the DCCC campus. The facility serves as a hub for the delivery of college and high school courses over a number of video networks.

Beginning this fall, DCCC and FHSU are sharing the cost of a full-time position. The person coordinates FHSU courses offered on the Dodge City campus, and also serves as a part time instructor for DCCC.

FHSU is offering graduate-level courses on the DCCC campus this fall. In addition, graduate degree programs in education and business administration are also available.

With the University of Kansas

Dodge City Community College serves as a host site for workshops that Nursing and Allied Health personnel and professionals in related fields may apply toward relicensure or certification.

With the Western Kansas Consortium

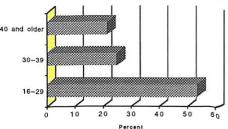

Participating institutions (Fort Hays State University and community colleges in Dodge City, Garden City, Seward County, Colby, Pratt and Barton County) are developing common course competencies for math and speech courses. The work will result in improved transferability of those course hours to four-year institutions.

A profile of DCCC's student body

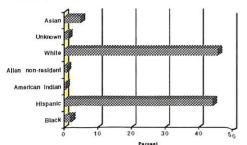

While so-called "traditional-age" students

While so-called "traditional-age" students make up the majority of DCCC's enrollment, older students are far from being the minority. Enrollment figures from Fall, 1996 illustrate:

By gender category, DCCC's Fall, 1996 enrollment was approximately 62 percent male, 38 percent female. This figure includes workers at Dodge City's two beef processing plants who are enrolled in training courses offered through DCCC's Center for Business and Industry. Actual on-campus gender breakdown is approximately 49 percent male, 51 percent female.

Adults, too

DCCC's Adult Learning Center (ALC) served 927 people during the 1996-97 school year. More than 400 students received English as a Second Language instruction. Even Start programs offered at the ALC served 32 families with children up to seven years old.

The ALC offers multilingual instruction for students taking General Education Development (GED) classes. During 1996-97, 450 students were enrolled in courses that will lead to a GED diploma.

The ALC also offers U. S. citizenship classes. Fifty-one students enrolled in the course.
